PREFACE

The old "Mother Goose Songs," once the exclusive birthright of English children, have in the course of centuries become the free property of the whole English-speaking child-world. But it has seemed to the publishers of this volume that these lovable children's tunes have not yet been accorded in this country a tithe of the popularity which they deserve. This is undoubtedly due to the fact that the inexpensive editions have not been artistic and the artistic editions have not been inexpensive.

With the hope that the nursery favorites which our mothers sung to us and which we sing to our children—those little verses and tunes which have always been associated with childhood's happiest hours—will find a place in every American home and an endearing spot in the affections of every American child, this collection which represents the fulfilment of an ideal on the part of the publishers, is issued.

It has been a labor of love with everyone connected with it from beginning to end. Carrie Bullard, who arranged and edited the music, Miss Mabel B. Hill, who is responsible for the illustrations, and we (the publishers), who did nothing in particular other than attend to the thousand and one details incidental to the publication of a work of this kind, are unanimous in the feeling that if we have succeeded in compiling a work a little more beautiful, a little more attractive to children and a little less expensive than similar collections, we shall have been amply rewarded. And that this book will eventually find a place in every American household is the earnest hope of

AN OLD-FASHIONED DOLLIE'S DANCING LESSON, by Emil Kronke

Polonaise

Old fashioned girls, and Dollie, too,
Old fashioned dance they know,
So Dollie in old fashioned way,
Must learn the Polonaise,
And her small, slippered feet must find
The measure of its music's rhyme

Now the Mazurka, set in style,
But Dollie preferred with a smile,
Her music, if you care to try,
And play it, you will soon know why.

This is the march, which by the rule
Old Dollie learns at dancing school;
They stepped to time in Dollie's day;
But now, they step in very gay.
